Annie is 10 years old and a love with a definite personality. She acts like a young dog with lots of energy and enthusiasm. She's mainly a one person dog, and lives for attention and affection. When you come home or walk in she shows her adoration and affection. She can get anxious though if you're away and will express herself accordingly by barking and showing her joy or concern.

She just recently had her teeth cleaned and taken care of and her annual check up. She has a fatty lump by her hind leg but it’s cosmetic only. She is spayed, up-to-date on shots, and housebroken.

We need to find her a home as we are selling our home and getting a divorce. We have 4 dogs at the moment, and two females Annie and another terrier who cannot be together – so we have to keep them barricaded from each other – Annie gets along with other dogs, we have two males and they are fine together. I think she would be okay with another female as well as I never had any problems before bringing the terrier into our home.

She brings so much happiness and would be a lovely companion for an older person who can give her love and attention.
