MEET PHOEBE... a 7-8 yr old, black/white, 22 lb, Lhasa Apso mix charmer. We just can't process who could let this little angel go, but then we never understand ☹️. She was left behind in the shelter when her buddy got adopted ☹️ We never make up their stories, but we believe Phoebe probably was owned by an older family who either couldn't afford her medical or could no longer care for her. We learned that she has a bladder stone the size of a golf ball, which will hit the fairway sooner than later! Phoebe also has dry eye in one eye, but she still sees fine. She will need drops daily for the rest of her life. She has a super happy disposition and her tail is always wagging. She loves kids and other dogs and is incredibly tolerant and easy going. Phoebe doesn't mind baths and will sit calmly while you lather her up. It was hard to tell about her potty training because of her UTI/bladder stone. She seems mostly housebroken but has had a couple accidents. Now that she has had her surgery, when she goes for regular walks, she does good.... but we never guarantee!! Phoebe would be great in almost any home – mature, family, individual or a couple who are around to spend time with her. She is not a very active dog, but daily walks should help her lose a little of her “zaftig, full figured” body! She wants to lay at you feet and gaze at you adoringly, and she will follow you everywhere! She is so sweet and a fantastic companion...the only thing she doesn't like is to be left all alone~! She doesn't have separation anxiety; we just want her in a home where she gets oodles of attention. Do you have a place in your heart and lap for Phoebes??
